Since she came home from hospital, Mo has been wetting the bed during the night and wetting herself when she's up. She seems not to notice. Very apologetic getup when I discover it

I'm worried that Mo isn't responding as normal. She seems rather vague and sometimes confused. I've noticed this as a change since she came out of hospital a week ago

Took Mo to the GP today. Dr A reassured me again that Mo is on the mend. Prescribed antibiotics for urinary infection.

5 days of antibiotics and no improvement. Mo still wetting repeatedly. Hard work trying to get her to the toilet before an accident. She says she doesn't need to go but then wets soon after

I'm worried about Mo's skin. She's sitting or lying in wet so often and the pads don't keep her dry. Skin looks sore and red where she sits in it

I'm more worried about Mo because she's not herself at all her vagueness has turned into getting confused about where she is and who is in the house.

Just been to the GP. Tells me I need to change Mo's pads more often. Prescribed some cream for her skin. The district nurse will visit to review

Mo keeps wetting at night and in the day. The district nurse doesn't want to catheterise her because she says it can cause more complications

Assessment day! They told me they didn't think this is bad enough to justify additional funding. The GP and occasional district nurse visits should be enough
